

The following is a diagram of triangles showing the population and percentage of the population in a particular generalized activity. All the angles in a triangle add up to 180 degrees, so that means one particular angle of a vector (denoting an activity) represents the percentage of the population in that activity. And the size of each triangle represents the relative population as a whole.

